STIR UP CLASS HATRED

Appeals Sent Abroad Cause Disorders—Two Motions for a New Trial.

Special Despatch to THE NEW YORK HERALD. Boston, Nov. 21.—In the worldwide campaign to arouse radical forces by the cry "Save Sacco and Vanzetti!" the leaders of the movement in New York are taking a conspicuous part. During the last days allowed by the State for appeals for the two Italian labor agitators, under sentence to die for murder and robbery at South Braintree, the radicals are prepared to stage a big fight to revive the fading Third Internationale.

Two motions are before the court, and until these are settled there will be no move in the case.

The first is for a new trial, founded on the grounds that the verdict as rendered by the jury, which was for conviction of the defendants, was against the weight of evidence and the law in the case.

The second also is for a new trial, but arguments have not yet been heard. It is based upon the allegation that there were irregularities in the jury room.

As the operations of the Internationale unfold in the handling of this case it becomes clearer how closely associated are the groups of radicals who recognize no national boundary lines in their efforts to set up a new world empire on the ruins of all governments. Lawyers and leaders of the New England group have been in constant touch with the New York leaders. Under the headings, "Are They Doomed?" and "This Same Thing May Happen to You," the appeal to class hatred is being sent broadcast in circulars printed in New York. The Workers Defense Union of New York is gathering funds for the cause.

Chance to Revive Radicalism. Carlo Tresca, one of the New York leaders who is arranging for the mass meeting in the Central Opera House next Friday evening, and who is gathering funds to help the defense, is well known in New England. Sacco was arrested in Milford, Mass., in 1919 for making a speech at a mass meeting protesting against the imprisonment of Tresca for the latter's part in the Masabie range iron miners' strike.

The close connection between the New England and New York groups was first shown by THE NEW YORK HERALD last October following the uprising of Reds in the European capitals. When the attack was made on Ambassador Herrick in Paris and the cry "Save Sacco and Vanzetti!" was heard through the capitals of Europe, the New York Herald made known that this case had been seized upon by the Internationale as its new slogan to hold together its melting forces.

Little doubt now exists in the minds of the secret service men that Michael Boda, in whose car the bandits are believed to have escaped after they had shot down the paymaster of Slater & Morrill Shoe Company's factory in April, 1920, made his way to Europe, where he has carried on the propaganda to save Sacco and Vanzetti. The defense disputes the claim of the State that it was Boda's car, but no trace has been found of him since the murder.

The charge of the State prosecutors now is that Feruccio Coacci, with whom Boda lived, took to Italy the $15,000 of which the paymaster was robbed. Coacci was deported by the Federal Government, but the defense points out that his ship did not reach Italy until May 5, 1920, and his detention in port could have been accomplished had the authorities wished to stop him. In its appeal for a new trial the defense sets up that the State made no attempt to prove that the bandit car escaped to the Coacci home on December 24, although William F. Kane, prosecutor, declared in his opening address that he would establish the charge.

How Disturbances Started.

The promise was left with the jury with no evidence to sustain it, the defense states. The inference was based on a statement by John King, who said he looked from a window in Bridge-water and saw the car passing. That point is two miles from the Boda-Coacci home by winding roads. Vanzetti denies that he was with Boda or that he ever knew him.

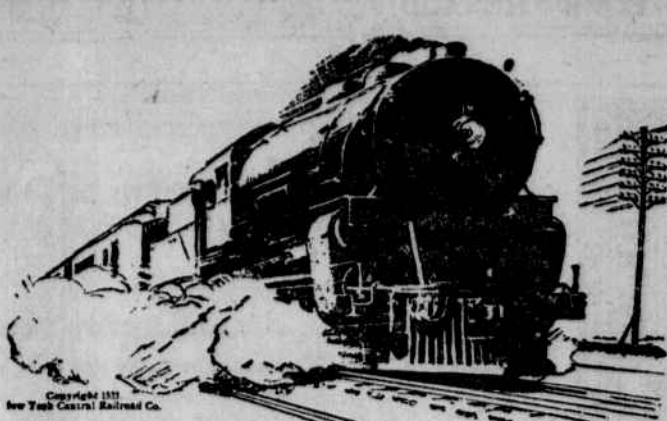

If either Boda or Coacci is in Italy it is regarded as certain they prompted Ella Musetti and Leon Mucci, members of the Italian Chamber of Deputies, to make their protest against the execution of Sacco and Vanzetti. That protest first attracted attention in Europe to the Braintree case.

Mucci formerly was a member of the Boston Bar, and in 1912 was the law partner of George E. Roemer, and was one of the counsel for Ettore, Giovanni and Caruso during the bitter strike of nine years ago, and for the same reason. They are practically the last of the well known Italian radicals to be silenced; all the others had been jailed or deported.

RED SYMPATHIZERS' MEETING IS HALTED

Special Despatch to THE NEW YORK HERALD. Chicago, Nov. 21.—"Friends of Soviet Russia" assembled in Carmen's Hall last night to protest against the conviction in Boston of Sacco and Vanzetti on a charge of murder heard speeches and got an opportunity to contribute when the hat was passed, but they did not get to see all of the picture show, which was one of the features of the programme. Federal agents intervened. They arrested J. Morris Lohr, wealthy Chicago broker, and confiscated two reels of motion picture film which depicted the meeting of the Third Internationale in Russia last September.

The picture showed signs bearing the legend "down with Capitalism" and otherwise advertised the Soviet propaganda.

SOHMER FOR TONE

And now the SOHMER CUPID GRAND in Period Models

THE Sohmer Cupid Grand is the pre-eminent small grand because it has never sacrificed one iota of tonal quality in achieving its diminutive size.

"Sohmer-for-tone" is more than a phrase. It is the governing thought of this generation of Sohmers, just as it was of the first. It applies to the Cupid Grand as it does to every piano which bears the Sohmer name.

But today, the Sohmer Cupid Grand is invested with a new charm—for the wonderful singing quality of Sohmer tone comes out of a case that is the last word in beautiful furniture.

In Three Charming Period Designs

Three new models are now ready for your judgment. The Queen Anne, the Early English and the Florentine. Each is authentic, each is carved by the hand alone, and each is correct as to color and detail.

For the first time, the piano has come into its own as a beautiful piece of furniture. And Sohmer, who made the first small grand piano worthy the respect of an artist, has at last made the small grand worthy the respect of the connoisseur of good furniture!

Allowances made on used pianos and periodical payments planned.

"As the Conference develops thoughts of many turn to the house where, silent and scarce accessible to visitors, sits the man who was the greatest of world figures only two years ago. "An old man, broken with the storms of state," he gives no sign of his meditations about the world's new effort for a better understanding. A British delegate who knew Mr. Wilson well in Paris in the days of his soaring fame discussed him to-day with this writer, saying: "He makes me think of the lines in 'Henry VIII': 'He was a scholar and a ripe and good one; exceeding wise, fair spoken and persuading; lofty and sour to them that loved him not, but to those men that sought him, sweet as summer.'"

LOOKING IN on the conference

by EDWIN C. HILL, appearing daily in The New York Herald. This column of brilliant thumbnail sketches of the notables and movements at the Conference has been pronounced the best news feature of the day. Seldom has the intimate, human side of an international meeting been portrayed in such an interesting and enjoyable way.
